A travel risk review helps an organisation to understand its travel risk, and ensure that it is adequately protecting travelling staff and fulfilling its duty of care.

The review includes a detailed assessment of the company’s travel exposure and travel risk management policies and procedures. It considers travel booking and notification processes, checks and procedures for authorisation and sign off of high-risk travel, third party security provider coordination, reporting and response protocols, delivery of high-risk location information and training, and any other relevant factors.

It also looks at emergency response and evacuation policies and procedures, including the provision of both political and medical emergency response - to ensure that staff have access to the resources needed following an incident of any nature.

The review results in a detailed report of findings and recommendations, which are graded according to pre-agreed categories.
